Eric Eldridge (Grandson) posted:

He loved to fish, as this picture shows. A bad day fishing was better than a good day at work for him. He didn't even need to catch a fish, if he just saw it come to the boat that was a thrill for him. He had lots of friends out on the bay, always saying hello to fellow fisherman, sharing advice and stories. One of many fine qualities about him in his endless pursuits of excellence in what ever he did.
